

Know the terrain.

Finch is Africa's environmental firm for the energy sector. Built on the ground, not from a distance.

Most environmental solutions in Africa are designed somewhere else, priced for somewhere else, and fail on arrival. We design for the site, the budget and the regulator that are actually there.

What we do

Environmental liabilities

What are we taking on, and what will it cost to close?

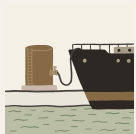

Due diligence for deals and lenders; closure plans for contaminated sites, through to sign-off.

Oilfield and industrial waste

Where does this waste go, lawfully?

Waste strategies, treatment options, contractor selection and compliance audits.

Waste programmes

Will this programme work on the ground?

Feasibility, project preparation, technical assistance and monitoring for governments and development institutions.

Regulatory and market entry

How does this actually work here?

Impact assessments, permits, local content and partner choice in a new country.

Energy is our focus. We take on work beyond it when the problem fits what we know.

How we work

Understand

We go to the site before we price the work.

Resolve

We design for the budget and the regulator that exist.

Advance

We close the file properly and record what we learned.

Small by design

Finch is small by design. We lead every engagement ourselves and draw on a network of senior specialists chosen for the country and the problem: engineers, scientists, lawyers, field supervisors and operators. You get one firm accountable from start to finish, and the right people on the ground. Experts are named for each proposal. CVs and availability letters are available on request.

Where we have worked

Our team has carried out engagements in fourteen countries: Algeria, Angola, Egypt, Gabon, Ghana, Kenya, Libya, Morocco, Mozambique, Namibia, Nigeria, Senegal, South Africa and Tanzania.

We take on work elsewhere in Africa when we can put the right people on the ground.
